The New Zealand 'Just Therapy' team has highlighted the importance of the cultural, gender and socio-economic contexts of therapy. They also emphasize the need for those who work directly with people in pain in the helping professions to be active beyond the therapy room in addressing the determinants of mental and physical ill-health in the societal and policy arenas. This workshop will focus on practical ways to address these issues in therapeutic discourse and the broader societal and policy implications.

Special attention will be given to ways to implement this model to child protection practices.

Tamalieutu Kiwi Tamasese is Coordinator of the Pacific Section of the Family Centre's Just Therapy Team

Charles Waldegrave is Coordinator of the Family Centre P'keha (European) section and leader of the Family Centre Social Policy Research Unit.
